

The DCACP Collaborative Project
Invites you to attend:

A Workshop on a 20-Hour Model of A Collaborative Divorce Process

A three-hour workshop on Friday, May 21, 2021, from 9am – Noon.
Via Zoom

This workshop is open to mental health professionals, attorneys, and financial neutrals.

Presenters: Jennifer Bradley, JD; Natalie Goldberg, LCSW;
Sue Soler, LCSW, Wayne Warren, and Sogand Zamani, JD

The DC Collaborative Project has been working with clients of modest means during the last four years, using a streamlined model of Collaborative divorce practice that allows teams to help clients reach settlement within a limited time frame. Teams have been successfully working toward resolutions with clients on issues related to both custody and finances while keeping to a framework of approximately 20 hours of service per professional. The model allows for some flexibility and extension of hours by mutual agreement of clients and team members, though the goal of reaching settlement within the 20 -hour model is set in advance.

This workshop will review the framework of this model and will address such questions as:

- How are these cases different from your traditional Collaborative cases?
- How are clients initially screened to allow professionals to assess clients' capacity to reach resolution in a limited time frame?
- How are meetings paced, arranged, and scheduled within the 20-hour framework?
- What protocols facilitate the efficient use of time within this model?
- How do the team members handle hurdles or challenges within a case that might slow down the pacing, or require additional hours of service to reach resolution?
- How might the 20-Hour model be used in more traditional cases with clients who have more financial resources?
- What protocols within the 20-Hour model might be helpful in more traditional cases that are not time limited to keep costs down?
